

r/aliens • 1 day ago
hoosierfan1968

I worked on a team that dealt with with NHI technology and left in 2018.

Experience

Hi, I'm writing this because I never got any sort of debrief or moment to decompress from a job I quit in February of 2018. I worked for an agency that dealt with issues related to non-human intelligence. Sometimes these were referred to as EBE's, or as a friend lovingly called them, "Ayyys".

I can't divulge what I did specifically, most of the information I'm going to discuss is anecdotal information I found out about from colleagues. This is because it would be easy to identify me from what my role was, as the information I can say about what I did specifically would be personally identifying. Feel free to dismiss my post as a hoax entirely, I know the right people will believe me. I'm posting this for myself, to make peace with the gravity (no pun intended) of the situation. I tried VA and independent therapy, but divulging this sort of information to a hipster trained in active listening probably wouldn't go well. Posting here is a last resort, but I hope I'm welcome to discuss what I can.

I'll first talk about my career history, what working for the agency is like, how it functions, and then my general thoughts. If my post makes it past moderation, I'll answer as many questions as I can. I'm unwilling to post an ID privately to moderators or otherwise. People who did that faced consequences. I don't think those people were reddit leakers specifically, but any act to talk about the information in any meaningful way outside of the chain of command ends badly. I'd rather be accused of making things up than risk that, because I simply don't care what people think of me. Hopefully my post will clear up why.

I'm currently a university professor (not at the university my username would lead you to believe). I was inspired to write this post when one of my students referred to me as, verbatim "a dude who has to know about aliens". If only he knew that wasn't even the start of it.

I graduated from college in the early 90s with a degree in something I'm passionate about but never used. I started my career as an assistant for a mechanical engineer at an aerospace contractor I got after working some connections I had. Entry-level contractor jobs are easier to get than you may think (well, maybe not if you've posted here). I eventually was a project manager overseeing a small team working on experimental aircraft. Over the course of my career in aviation I worked at 3 different contractors. I was on some of the teams working in autonomous flight in Nevada, among other places.

I'll share two major things I noticed that, looking back, could be related to NHI research.

It was a sort of open secret I was let in on at some point in the late 90s that if a large-scale invasion or threat to the mainland US were to materialize, the US had an "ultimate trump-card" of sorts that would render everything we were working on as completely obsolete. Jokes like "well, work smarter not harder on 'x' because if it were to come down to it, we wouldn't use that technology anyway." weren't uncommon. I assumed this was referring to nukes.

Later, I spent time doing inspections at various secret facilities due to my standing in particular agencies. If I'm identified, I will definitely lose that standing, so there's that. This was not as exciting as it sounds, it was very technical and boring. I was mostly just a glorified HVAC inspector. I visited a handful of facilities, but two of them in particular stood out as there were areas within them I wasn't allowed to access. At the first facility, the scope of my job was to inspect the entire location. One area had its own security, who, after a long discussion, basically told me to kick rocks. My boss wasn't authorized to let me through either. I wrote a scathing report about this incident in my overall assessment of the facility and my boss erased it from the document entirely. The situation at the second facility was similar. I'll admit, I was what I guess the my students call a "Karen" about it. I knew that whoever was operating these areas was working completely outside of congressional regulation, which, while it does happen in certain sectors, is really not a good look. Once I got the job I'm talking about, I was able to confirm the second facility was related to NHI research. I was never able to confirm the first was.

After a teaching stint, I was offered an interview for a position in my project management roots again near where I was living at the time. I wasn't told what I would be working on, which isn't uncommon. I was excited to get back to work because I had been working on goal-oriented drone swarms in my free time and assumed that's what the interview would be for.

The interview took place in a SCIF in someone's house. Looking back, this was most likely a house that wasn't lived in, but just used for the purpose of interviewing potential hires without giving away the location. It's also likely this was the location because this agency doesn't exist in any official capacity. Yes, it has a name, it gets sort-of-kind-of funding. Saying the name would get me killed. I wish I were exaggerating, I was told the name at the start of the interview, and I had never heard of it before. I've never even said the name out loud. Paradoxically, even though the agency "doesn't exist" if someone knew the name, it's likely a paper trail exists through publicly available documents. A lot of the information isn't classified because the agency is so secretive going through the process to classify it in the first place would reveal it to too many people.

position I was being interviewed for. Looking back, I should've never accepted the job, but the allure of working on swarms was too great.

The first office I worked at was an office building that didn't stand out in any way at all. I believe our neighbors in the office park were a fashion studio and a dentist, among others. The difference was our building had 24/7 armed security. The first few days were heavy paperwork and on-boarding. One of my old bosses called me on an office phone to talk to me before I was officially on-boarded. As a management nerd, the biggest challenge of working for this "agency" is that it's a paperless office. It has its own highly sophisticated intranet with hundreds of archival documents. The implication was, that unless it absolutely had to be saved, to never, ever write anything down. I remember an early colleague telling me "a gantt chart is a great way to get fired". This was a challenge at first, remembering all of the information with no documentation is not something I'm particularly built for, especially when the information is about NHI.

Later, I worked in a facility within-a-facility just like the one I had tried to inspect. It stored a craft. Being near the craft for extended periods of time is extremely dangerous, especially if it is being experimented on with power. I didn't observe any injuries to anyone while I was there, but all sorts of long-term nasty injuries were relayed to me through rumors and warnings. The craft was shaped like a dreidel without the handle. There was a large exterior piece that went missing when it was recovered. The theory is it acted as a stabilizer, although some argue it was a crude weapon. It sat in a custom hydraulic rig that could be used to rotate it into all sorts of different positions, kind of like those aerotrim astronaut training balls where they spin you around. I wasn't on the team that got to use the rotation rig. The rig was so large and extensive I spent a few weeks thinking it was part of the craft before someone told me otherwise. Typically, the craft would held on its side in the rig for easier storage. Its weight just naturally sat it that way, although it was intended to be flown vertically.

The shape was directly informed by its purpose. Every shape is custom molded in a metallic material that would revolutionize the way we travel if we had it. In following the topic as much as I can manage to, I've seen some other people mention the material. There were some material scientists that had been working there for decades. I never got to go inside the craft. It was guarded 24/7. Boy, did I want to look.

The agency goes out of its way to hire individuals who have little interest in working in this space at all. They recruit particularly out of BYU, although you have to have a contractor or government career for around a decade to be considered for an interview. Published papers don't hurt. When I worked at the second facility the sorts of people that were there were frustrating to interact with because my initial reaction to working in the that facility was extreme excitement, and it wasn't shared. I believe this is partially responsible for the stagnation, high turnover rate, and compartmentalization. I quickly learned who to trust, and gained some enormous that helped my work. Part of why I'm being secretive about my ID is because the turnover rate results in a sort of "summer camp" work environment. It's easy to point to "classes" of people in various non-leadership positions that all were hired, fired, or quit at similar times. If I said when I started, ended, and where I worked I'd be easily identifiable because there are so few people that match my description. Leadership has been there forever. No, not literally.

The agency is divided up into several "wings", not unlike the executive, legislative and judicial branches. I'm not insinuating they're a shadow government, but the wings check and balance each other in a way a government is at least... designed to. These wings include mechanical engineering, biologic research, weapons research, computer science, tracking, what I'll call anthropology, what I'll call crash recovery because that's what colleagues who are planning to come forward will call it, and security. I'll list some information about each. There are definitely more wings that I don't know about.

What's unique is these sub-groups exist all as part of different parent government organizations and are HQ'd where their parent agencies are. For example, the tracking wing is sort-of-kind-of embedded as R&D at NORAD. This is a simplification of the actual "paperwork" involved, it's honestly complicated and I don't know much about how it works. I do know that this is how they maintain funding even when the parent agency goes completely dark for stretches of time. It's worth mentioning that these departments employ, at most, 50 people each. It's typically much lower than that. This is why we're all pushing for whistleblower protection. It's not hard to identify us because there are so few of us in the first place.

Mechanical engineering is exactly what it sounds like. It's the most extensive, the oldest, and the most compartmentalized. We have crashed craft in various states of complete. We had a recovered craft that worked almost perfectly that was shot down by ourselves. I saw this coming, and it's part of why I quit. There's a lot of information about this wing in the public sphere. Part of their job is to determine what each shape of craft is used for. This is an important job because we're unsure of NHI's intentions. If we discover the designs are intended to hurt us, action will have to be taken. I don't know what that means in practice, but it's what the engineers mostly study. Consider this lecture around the 10 minute mark about the differing characteristics of an F22 versus a passenger plane. Now imagine figuring out the purpose of the passenger plane versus the F22. Since we're humans, and those are human designs, eventually a team could figure it out. It's not as easy when the designs aren't for us, or purposes we fully understand. Triangles are the most impressive design, and we don't have one. It's likely China does, leadership is mad about that. This team discovered, a long time ago, that the reason why craft appear so bright to us humans is because it's not really "light" but rather the product of the crazy amounts of power these craft require. Sort of like smoke coming out of an exhaust pipe.

too obvious. There are bodies stored in other locations apart from their main HQ.

Weapons research is a large wing, and is fairly new. It was absorbed by the Space Force when it the SF was created. Frustration with the SF as a whole is part of why I left shortly before it started. I don't know much about it. It has a high turnover rate and is dangerous to work in. People were injured and compensated by a large private aerospace contractor instead of the USG. Its main job is to strap a nuke to a reverse-engineered craft and just see what the hell happens.

Computer science is (or, was, it may have moved after I left) hq'd at a facility in my home state. This is rare, because most of the other wings are within a stones throw of DC, or Nevada. This is mostly based around researching the crafts navigation system. The navigation in every craft is the same. The craft use a system that originally befuddled generations of researchers, but it's essentially a 3D dijkstra algorithm. It finds points around the craft, and chooses the most efficient possible route through space time to get to that point. Some of the parameters it uses to gauge efficiency are totally unknown to us and are a serious point of contention. It's not autonomy, but rather obstacle avoidance not unlike what you would see in a self-driving car. But, the self driving car could go through air, space and water without worrying about what medium its in. Additionally, the algo accounts for the crafts place in time. I don't think this means that the craft time travel in the way we think they can, but rather go so fast that they experience dilation and can hit objects in the future, and, potentially, past at their target destination. It's possible they do this on purpose sometimes. I don't know much about the internal programming of the computer or how it actually does any of this. There are a few senior scientists that hold that information dear. One of them jokingly refers to it as "Ayyyyy C", as in, C for NHI. I know that he doesn't work with a computer, only a pad of paper and pen.

Although the algo is extremely effective, Nuclear explosions and experiments somehow interfere with this navigation. Craft particularly avoid Diablo Canyon, even if we put something they really want there. They mostly avoid previous crash sites as well. More on crashes later.

Speaking of avoidance, tracking, like I mentioned, is (or was) part of NORAD. The NHI deploy craft of various shapes and sizes all the time. I don't want to claim that they have advanced cloaking techniques, but from what I heard, the tracking department basically is in an eternal game of cat-and-mouse. They don't have adequate technology to track the transmedium craft. All I would say on a record is NHI know we can track them, and know how to avoid us. They usually avoid detection by going underwater, especially in the case of particularly large (by human measurement, enormous) craft. It's interesting that historical UFO designs mimic the design of buildings and vehicles of that time period. Whether this was just humans not being able to reference what the designs look like, or a form of mimicry is anyones guess. Someone in leadership knows the answer, I don't.

It's important to note not everyone at NORAD was part of the tracking team, but the tracking team is embedded in NORAD and interfaces with them on a minute to minute basis. This leads to scenarios where NORAD will report an object, and the tracking team will silently acknowledge, but give no explanation. This lead to a catastrophic incident that happened after I left but knew about from a colleague. Supposedly, tracking is being moved to the Space Force to clear up these miscommunications. If I were working there, I would probably be working on that onboarding process. NORAD was moved to Cheyenne not only to protect from a foreign adversary, but also because the facility is uniquely equipped to track NHI craft.

The wing I called "Anthropology" is the weirdest one by far. It focuses on a few different things. They originally studied NHIs intentions and "culture" if it's possible to call it that. The reports I read from this early research changed the way I see the world.

Anthropology and Computer Science were at one point decompartmentalized to study how the NHI interact with the craft. The NHI are linked to their craft in a way that borders on biological. The actual way they interface with the components of the craft is not as sophisticated. Take this video. Although it's an immature video, the way he interfaces with a piston that moves the gas pedal is similar, albeit much simpler than the way NHI interact with their craft. They send signals using their body to systems that control the craft. It's hypothesized that they can and prefer to control craft remotely, but I'm not sure if we were really researching this.

Take note that if the driver of the jerry-rigged death trap in the video panics, the car would accelerate due to heightened brain activity. When people wonder how a superintelligent being can crash, this is part of the answer, in conjunction with the navigation system malfunctioning. I personally don't think the NHI feel "stress" as we do, but if they heightened their activity and overrode the pathfinding system instead of letting it do its job, there could be an accident.

A smaller subset of this wing focuses on how humans can interface with craft that are currently in the sky. If you see an image of a large disc above a gas station in the snow, it was someone in this department "summoning" a craft not unlike how cheap RC car controllers can interfere with each other when used at the same time. Some people are better suited to interfere with NHI craft than others. We're not sure why.

On somewhat comedic note, one colleague was harshly punished for using this research to encounter NHI craft at a party. There was an outdoor bonfire, alcohol, and questions about what she did for work. She wasn't killed or anything, just called a dumbass and told to never, ever do that again.

Crash Recovery probably has the most people involved. It's split up among several parent orgs, but funding is funnelled away from it and into other departments when there's little activity. This is common among the entire agency, as funding and staff get balanced between the different wings based on progress or lack thereof. Most of the crash recovery staff are staff from tracking and security that are involved in Crash Recovery. It's also made up of members of all of our favorite three letter organizations. Crash Recovery's overall structure was referred to as a volunteer fire department. It's typically some people playing pool and watching movies, but when the need arises, all hands on deck from the current staff, and on-call members.

Crashes are exceedingly rare. The number of crashes goes down exponentially because they learn to avoid the cause of the crash. When they crash, they make no effort to retrieve the debris, save for one instance. I personally believe some crashes weren't "crashes" but were NHI parking a vehicle for us, because there were no bodies recovered and the craft was in perfect shape.

Security, to put it mildly, are terrifying. Imagine the very best of the SEALs, NSA and Secret Service all working together. They are short-staffed, but that staff is not only elite, but dedicated. Their numero uno rule is people that mention the agency name are killed. It's not a question, and it happened during my time. You'll hear more about them as news about the retaliation Dave comes out. I wasn't directly interviewed by him, but I know several people who were. The security team figured it out quickly and, you could say they aren't his fans. They constantly monitor all discussions about the topic, but rarely act in real life unless absolutely necessary. They staff facilities like the second one I worked at. This team also actively engages in disinformation, gaslighting and other similar campaigns. Their goal is to keep the US's secrets about this tech, secret, because other countries are close to breakthroughs. They also conduct counter intel on what other countries know, and counter-counter intel about what they know about what we know. Not to sound crazy, but, the security team will see this at some point or another, so, a friendly hello to them. Can't touch this ;p (I sure hope!)

I have a hunch that the current public facing task forces are actually their own wing within security. A friend of mine texted me once, "Sean Kirkpatrick, you can get your ass kicked". Ha. Don't confuse these public facing task forces with the work Dave & co. are doing. Dave is the real deal.

I should mention that Leadership is kind of its own "wing". It's not on paper, but they operate above all of the other departments. Leadership is made up of managers who pay close attention to each wing, they discuss info they know, and bring up contradictions to upper managers. I don't know how far this chain goes up. I reported to someone who reported to someone. I believe it goes higher than that. I have no idea who is at the top or what their credentials are. I suspect they're in the private sector, with their bankroll disguised as R&D for government contracts. Leadership, honestly, made the right choices with the information they had, at least when I was there. Some bad people started to get in charge and change the way things worked among the middle managers and individual teams. This pissed people off and led to multiple catastrophes. As far as I know they faced no discipline.

So, that was exhaustive. Those are the wings of the agency that I knew about during my time there. It feels good to get this off my chest. I've been sort-of keeping up to date on the topics coverage in mainstream media and want to give some of my thoughts on this.

If the US comes out directly and says "We have craft, we have bodies", it means we are on the verge of a serious global conflict like we've never seen before. They will only reveal this to the public if absolutely necessary. The way the information is going to come out is through people like Dave and further probing from congress. Not all of it should be public information, but I believe the technology that is just sitting... somewhere would completely revolutionize the way we live. I don't think anything significant will happen in my lifetime. It was a frustrating job, because everything was so stagnant and had so, so much potential. We're talking about technology so advanced it could render every single current global issue obsolete. If we solved two major issues with the craft and were able to manufacture them, we wouldn't know what to do with ourselves. The technology being incorporated into our technical revolution is a hoax. I heard one theory from a guy at a bar that the transistors at Bell Labs were inspired by technology at Area 51. This is a joke, the technology makes transistors look like sticks and stones.

I believe multiple species of NHI is misinformation spun up by the security team. There are mystery wings of the agency I didn't get to learn about during my time. It's possible one of these researches other species, but I doubt that.

NHI potentially experiment on us, and definitely experiment on animals. We have no idea why. The main reason you'll never see organized disclosure is because nobody can agree on what to say. We simply don't know enough. Namely, the NHIs intentions (sort-of, we have a good theory) and where they are from. The Anthropology wing believes the NHI are controlled by an intelligence that is beyond our current understanding of how life works. The biology reports conflict with this, which is why things can't be compartmentalized. If the government were to disclose info, they'd have to get the story straight. We also have no idea where they are from. "We" as in everyone I worked with. It's possible someone in high up in leadership knows. I don't think the answer is as simple as another planet or caves on earth.

The reason why specific facility locations are kept from the public is because some of them are sensitive and also not entirely NHI-researched based. It would be possible for some tiktokers and hippies to storm the first office I worked at if they were careful. Every place where the agency works is also home to other operations, which is why it's so hard to identify where they are. Lower leadership is hq'd in

I was contacted by a documentary filmmaker when some of my friends were, but I turned it down due to my specific involvement and how easy it would be to track me down if I gave particularly juicy info. I believe the story will come out soon.

I no longer work in the field and teach full-time.

After a quick proofread, that's my post. I'm not tuned in to discussions other than what major outlets have to say, but I hope some of my information is interesting. It felt good to type, even if my post doesn't get accepted. I feel tempted to sign off with my first name how I always do in emails, but I have a feeling that would end badly. I'm currently on a camping trip with my family, but I'll be around to answer questions at various times. Please don't DM me anything too weird. Thanks for giving me an opportunity to talk, I've never done anything like this before. I'm sorry I couldn't provide information that proves who I am, I like not being paralyzed or dead. I'm sure you'll see others make the same claims in due time.

EDIT: Well, this is a lot. I checked on my post earlier this morning and didn't see anything. I'll try to respond to what I can. I'm recovering from a back injury and will be up for a while.

2.9K 1.3K Share

Add a comment

Sort by: Best Search Comments

berkenobi MOD • 9h ago • I want to KNOW

OP, since this is just another wall of text, please substantiate your claims in the next 12hrs

Vote Share ...

+ 33 more replies

Appropriate-Cycle-48 • 1d ago

Thank you for your post. I have one question:

"Craft particularly avoid Diablo Canyon, even if we put something they really want there"... Like what?

172 Reply Share ...

hoosierfan1968 OP • 19h ago

I'm not a nuclear guy so I can't answer this in a technical capacity. Before my time, we discovered certain types of experiments and storage, not just explosions, attract NHI more than others. Especially in the 60s and 70s. Some of the first papers I read were about efforts to lure NHI to locations where nuclear "stuff" was stored. Mostly, if we destroy fuel rods, they want to know about that. Not related to my job but I think I saw some documentary or something about a train that carried used fuel rods, not sure if it was real. You could sell tickets on that train to NHI fans, and they would get their moneys worth.

This same type of storage and experimentation happens at Diablo Canyon, it's practically one of the only places that still does it in a meaningful way.

192 Reply Share ...

+ 8 more replies

+ 25 more replies

PhineasFGage • 1d ago

Now THIS is the kind of shit I doomscroll for

380 Reply Share ...

something and nukes mess with that. If it comes out that they harvest us or something and that nukes make us taste bad I wouldn't mind living in a radioactive wasteland — just to be petty and spite them.

43 Reply Share ...

Leotis335 • 9h ago

Yeah, if that was the case, I'd make myself a Uranium 235 buttplug and wear it daily...just to give their dinner plans the middle finger.

12 Reply Share ...

+ 3 more replies

+ 6 more replies

+ 2 more replies

xSimoHayha • 1d ago

The 'purpose built shapes' again mirrors what the 4chan leaker was saying.

213 Reply Share ...

No_Collection8349 • 21h ago

I was thinking the same thing. Also, didn't the leaker say he was coming clean because he was dying and believed studying the craft could have been responsible for it? That aligns with this guy being warned of long-term issues from just being near it.

Could just be a part of the lore now, too, so any hoaxers would have that in their story too, though.

Fun read though even if it's fake.

125 Reply Share ...

+ 1 more reply

hoosierfan1968 OP • 19h ago

Who's he? It's interesting this information made it out into the public, it wasn't a common theory until sometime in the early 2010s, according to what I saw.

93 Reply Share ...

xSimoHayha • 19h ago

from this: <https://imgur.com/a/4chan-whistleblower-NXjWQaN>

59 Reply Share ...

SirLadthe1st • 7h ago

Would be great to know what you think of their story u/hoosierfan1968!

8 Reply Share ...

+ 1 more reply

goldenteamonk • 18h ago

This breaks down the 4chan whistleblower: <https://open.spotify.com/episode/3Bmi4YAd5n9iczCmvEeQr0?si=dUkHsRLJQX2RxF6hFXLemA>

46 Reply Share ...

+ 1 more reply

+ 1 more reply

Q-bist • 21h ago

Also 'enormous' craft

calib0y64 · 14h ago

Was thinking that right away. Remember he said believe him or not, you'll come back to his post 🤔👉 ooooooweee

↑ 16 ↓ Reply Share ...

Glowwerms · 17h ago

23 more replies

SpaceSugarGlider · 1d ago

I'm skeptical, but thanks for the detailed post.

--

Questions about a couple things you'd written:

Triangles are the most impressive design, and we don't have one. It's likely China does, leadership is mad about that.

The anonymous sources who spoke with Shellenberger last year, allegedly some of the same who spoke with Grusch, claimed the United States did in fact have at least one triangle-shaped craft in its possession:

<https://public.substack.com/p/us-has-12-or-more-alien-space-craft>

One source described having seen three kinds of craft, including one shaped like a triangle

Who's right?

--

NHI potentially experiment on us, and definitely experiment on animals. We have no idea why. The main reason you'll never see organized disclosure is because nobody can agree on what to say. We simply don't know enough. Namely, the NHIs intentions (sort-of, we have a good theory) and where they are from.

What's the theory? Indulge me?

Regarding their origin:

If there's a biology department, they should be able to tell if a life-form is terrestrially-derived (part of our biosphere, however distantly related to us and all other Earth-life) or from some other star system (or whatever). If they have dead bodies ("biologics"), then do the samples have DNA/RNA? Related to Earth-life, or not? If they are not related to Earth-life then they are from a different biosphere, presumably around a different star. I would think the question of origin would be a simple one then, leaving aside specifics like which star system.

--

Requests:

While you're here: who in ufology is disinfo? Which stories, which people?

Since you've been on the inside, you should be able to dish at least to some degree on who/what is the real deal, and who's peddling fakes. Grusch is legit, who else? Anyone? No one?

Who pulls the strings behind AARO?

Can you name a facility dealing with NHI technology that we can go look up on Google Maps today. Not one you worked at. Eglin? Wright-Pat? Groom Lake? Edwards? White Sands?

--

If you see this thank you for your time.

About the triangles, it's interesting someone said we do have one. Part of what makes working in such secrecy difficult is things can get lost in translation. I wouldn't be surprised if there was a find so significant an entire wing was sprung up to protect it. If there is one, it would've been kept secret from me. There were a lot of things I wanted to know I couldn't get to.

The theory goes something like this: everything that has a life experience shares some sort of connection. These connections manifest themselves as some sort of mesh. The way the robots work in westworld is weird analogy but sort of what they believe. At some point, the mesh becomes dense enough for something to happen. I believe it has something to do with time, if enough shared history exists it can be manipulated somehow. The motivations behind this manipulation are unknown. Asking about this was an easy way to get in trouble.

I agree that the biology department should know. It wasn't info I was privy to. I will say that doing experiments beyond basic observation was something people argued over because they don't want to damage what little we have.

On disinfo: The big one was the guy that said we had some sort of exchange or visited other places. We've hardly been able to get our craft off the ground, let alone pilot them in a way that would be significant in any fashion.

Lackatski (is that how you spell his name?) is legit too. Brandon Frugal is cool, but I'm not sure if he'll discover anything significant. I'm more excited to see what he does with that theme park in Utah.

AARO could be the security team. It also could be from the Pentagon with real intentions to help, but it was "hijacked" at some point by the security team. I don't know enough to really answer that, but that's my speculation.

Facilities: All of the above. I guess you guys do your research. Not that it's visible on maps, but Raven Rock & Pine Gap as well. Pine Gap wasn't really something I was able to learn about during my time, but I wouldn't be surprised if funds are raised for research there completely outside of congressional oversight, which is why I'm pissed and posting. Tracking is probably still at Cheyenne. I can name those because you'll never get in.

158 Reply Share ...

SpaceSugarGlider · 19h ago

Thanks very much for your replies, I greatly appreciate each.

Project Serpo was the name of the alleged human/alien exchange program - you're confirming that was a disinfo effort on behalf of the gatekeepers, as opposed to just something made up for kicks by trolls (?)

Lacatski, Fugal are legit then... Can I beg your indulgence once more to confirm Elizondo and Mellon as legit? DeLonge?

Do you have any opinion of controversial names like Greer, Lazar? Eric Davis, and by extension the Wilson/Davis notes? Any opinions on any images of aliens or craft in the public which are legit, or are they all fake? Any close to what you've seen?

(and I promise I will stop pestering you after this, thank you again)

62 Reply Share ...

+ 4 more replies

wemakebelieve · 18h ago

A mesh ? Any further insights? What, get enough living beings in a "time" and eventually you can manipulate it? Is reality sort of a collective thing, as it's often said in paranormal circles, that we all agree? Is that why "Egregores" are a thing? This has peaked my interest more than anything...

36 Reply Share ...

+ skeleboifp · 16h ago

MammothJammer · 16h ago · Edited 12h ago

Most probably, 3d spacetime may be created via interaction of physics and consciousness. At this point it's almost undeniable that the phenomenon is related to the mind, and quite possibly what we would term the soul.

34 Reply Share ...

+ 3 more replies

Apotheosis

↑ 21 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

+ 16 more replies

+ 5 more replies

mr-anthropi · 1d ago

What is the "good theory" about their intentions, origins, etc?

Are you/have you testified to Congress?

How do you think this is all going to play out?

How does summoning UAP work? CE5? Gateway experience? Something more advanced, biological, or different entirely?

⊖ ↑ 126 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

hoosierfan1968 OP · 19h ago

They believe all life experiences time, and this time is saved in the form of memories and experiences to some sort of "mesh" not unlike the robots in westworld. They want this mesh to become a certain "size" so they can mess with it in some sort of way.

Not to congress directly. I'm currently waiting on some whistleblower protections to pass and considering this my practice run. Be on the look out for an Indiana U pin.

"Summoning" isn't really a good word, I shouldn't have said it that way. Interfering is a better term, particularly when craft are unmanned. I just did a quick google of what "CE5" is, believe it or not, I've never heard of it called that. This is along the lines of what it's like, I'm shocked that there's this much about it on the internet. It won't just be feint lights in the sky. As far as I know, remote communication isn't a thing.

It's like you're going to an RC car race with a controller the same bandwidth as someone else. When you make an input on the controller, you can steer their car (save for various things in place that keep this from happening with RCs). In practice, this is done by being close enough to a craft to be able to interfere with it in the first place, and then basically, yeah, meditating, to get it to come closer. The signals NHI send to their craft can be measured with Hz waves, although that's definitely not the only signal being sent and received. Physical devices existed to mimic and amplify this but were destroyed before I got there.

⊖ ↑ 130 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

barukspinoza · 17h ago

Interesting you mention IU. I am from Indiana and am acquaintances with someone I believe to be high up in the military. To those that want to pore through my post history, you will never ever figure out who it is as this is the first time I am even mentioning that individual.

Anyway, he has given me several cryptic messages to get out of northwest Indiana immediately and stay out. I'm thinking it's all the superfund sites in the region, do you have any insight on that?

↑ 35 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

+ 7 more replies

Adventurous_Rip3774 · 19h ago

What you're saying about their "culture" and time meshes is extremely interesting. Would you be able to expand upon that at all?

Any knowledge of communications with NHI you can comfortably share?

⊖ ↑ 17 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

DrugsAreEpicSauce · 17h ago

True Believer

22  Reply  Share ...

awesomeo_5000 · 16h ago

Even more interesting if this is a sense or ability that we as humans simply cannot access or perceive.

Imagine a universe where this thing evolves in certain species. They share a unified experience and purpose. And then there's everything else.

It's akin to how we view ourselves compared to animals. There are animals that are similar, dolphins, whales, but we still treat them like shit and have a general indifference to them.

But say they banded together and started disrupting our shipping lanes (even more so than they already have been), we'd hunt them to control them.

Some of the extended UFO law about certain people having different brain structures is interesting too. Perhaps we haven't evolved to the point of having access to this experience? Perhaps the NHI introduce this ability through genetic engineering and wait for it to propagate in a population to increase their mesh density?

Let's say they have this ability, but their generation time is huge. Instead of 9 months gestation and ~25 years of brain development, it takes 1000 years. How do you scale that mesh in such a population effectively? You scale it in a population of simpler organisms. It's what we do with microbes; clone a gene into yeast and get them to express a protein en masse.

Maybe we're nothing but one of a million bioreactors the aliens have cooking.

39  Reply  Share ...

+ More replies

+ godosomethingelse · 10h ago

+ 4 more replies

+ 4 more replies

mr-anthropi · 17h ago

Are there any theories on why the NHI were "parking a vehicle for us?" Any idea how we fit into their agenda? Are there multiple factions with differing agendas?

I like your reclassification and new analogy for summoning. I will now refer to this as UAP hijacking. Were there ever any repercussions from the NHI for humans doing this? Can you say what Hz wavelengths their signals use?

Can you expand more on the experience mesh? Is this what others keep alluding to about there being a soul aspect to their goals? Does it cover us and them? How do they expand it? What's their goal in doing so? What impact would this "manipulation" potentially have on us?

15  Reply  Share ...

+ 2 more replies

+ 17 more replies

Prudent-Internet-483 · 23h ago

I am really curious about your last question as well but I don't think they are going to answer it.

14  Reply  Share ...

+ 1 more reply

bicoma · 1d ago · Edited 23h ago similar, albeit much simpler than the way NHI interact with their craft. They send signals using their body to systems that control the craft. It's hypothesized that they can and prefer to control craft remotely, but I'm not sure if we were really researching this."

"A smaller subset of this wing focuses on how humans can interface with craft that are currently in the sky. If you see an image of a large disc above a gas station in the snow, it was someone in this department "summoning" a craft not unlike how cheap RC car controllers can interfere with each other when used at the same time. Some people are better suited to interfere with NHI craft than others. We're not sure why."

I fully believe this. I've had two experiences with NHI (Non-Human Intelligence). One was with a tall white being that I spoke with(subconsciously through astral but when it poked me felt real as day and triggered a stroke like effect on my physical body) , but I'll tell you about the most prominent one. I don't care if anyone one believes me, I wasnt on any type of drugs when these two events happened for those that might bring that up, but based on my experiences in Puerto Rico, one night in Aguada, I was sleeping and out of nowhere felt something connecting to my subconscious (I kid you not). It felt as if my consciousness was being pulled up. Over the course of what felt like a minute, I found myself face to face with an NHI. It looked like I was about a foot away from its face. It was small, brownish color(hard to tell lighting looked limited inside the craft), had big black eyes, spikes on its head, and small arms. In a way, I could tell it was piloting the craft with its subconscious as well because its hands were free from any joystick of sorts.

I must have been connected to this being for maybe one minute tops I knew it could "see me" before I was pulled out and fully became aware. I got up out of my bed. When I got out of bed, I heard a buzzing or vibrating sound in the distance. As it got closer, the animals outside were losing their minds. Finally, it felt like it was right above my grandparents' house the vibrating sound was super strong at this point, hovering for a little while longer. Then you could hear it slowly drift away, and the sound dulled over time. I didn't get to see the craft because the way the metal shutters were set up, it was hard to see up from the windows. It felt like the NHI maybe was passing by and in a way could sense that it could connect to my mind and might of just been curious to a degree but ill never forget this moment for the rest of my life.

I do believe in people subconsciously or maybe even consciously being able to summon crafts given my experience.

125 ...

FeralJinx · 22h ago

Hey I believe you. What you said happened to me during my abductions. You explained it so well with the feeling that your consciousness was connected to and pulled up, it was hard for me to describe but this is a great way to put it. And I also heard the humming sound of a craft above my house when they would come to get me.

49 ...

nullvoid_techno · 16h ago

This is weird but ... I'll share it.

I have had a feeling of being "helped up" by my back on a table. I could see out the room and it was kinda of like imagining a stadium with a dome, and each chair had a cave. So I was looking out in the open to a giant endless series of caves which I assume were rooms just like mine.

It felt like a checkup or monitoring? Anyway I regained consciousness as I was being helped back up on the table by my back and then I "zoomed" out from that dream like state into my body and in my bed. It felt different than a typical dream. It felt very present and the odd feeling or vibration of "snapping back" to myself was certainly odd and unique. I immediately told my wife next to me as "that was an extra weird one."

My two cents. 🙌

18 ...

+ 5 more replies

Ekonexus · 16h ago

I have practiced CE5 protocol and have had several sightings of crafts at a distance, while alone, while with one other, and with 9.

I have also had an encounter with 9 higher dimensional blue humanoids, telepathically, consciously, sober.

14 ...

+ 3 more replies

Menzingerr · 1d ago

Awesome post, was a fun read. Thank you.

Questions:

Did the year 2027 hold any significance? This is often brought up by people in the field.

Any ideas on the "dark" truth/nature of this? This has also been raised by a lot of people in the field.

👍 270 🗨️ Reply 📄 Share ...

hoosierfan1968 OP · 19h ago

2027 doesn't ring any bells for what I know. Lots of people claim their team will have a significant breakthrough at some point, and then it almost never happens.

The dark part is that we aren't at the top of the food chain and most likely don't have the means to understand NHI intentions. This "net" of shared experiences they're trying to manipulate is completely inaccessible to us, the same way we can't see all the colors insects can. I honestly enjoyed exploring that, but it's a shock to most people. BYU grads often don't buy it and think there's a religious angle.

👍 192 🗨️ Reply 📄 Share ...

glasses_the_loc · 18h ago

I was shown a multidimensional map of this "net" during a consciousness abduction experience. This comment here seals the deal - I thank you for your service to humanity.

They are from an alternate reality. Vocabulary does not describe the experience of being pushed into this higher reality and looking down upon your world through the eyes of God.

👍 81 🗨️ Reply 📄 Share ...

+ 18 more replies

+ 22 more replies

+ 94 more replies

aBoyandHisDogart · 23h ago · Edited 22h ago

These posts are so much fun. Theories and new ideas to chew over should always be welcome. But there's a part of me that refuses to believe anyone with this kind of story would decide to post a tell-all on reddit. Either way, fantastic post

👍 23 🗨️ Reply 📄 Share ...

+ 4 more replies

Art-of-drawing · 1d ago

Guys, one thing is sure, this guy is NOT on a camping trip

👍 101 🗨️ Reply 📄 Share ...

hoosierfan1968 OP · 19h ago

Staying at an AirBnB to see the aurora. Mac laptop, great wifi, and a giant pile of snowmobiling DVDs.

👍 67 🗨️ Reply 📄 Share ...

Art-of-drawing · 19h ago

O well, hopefully untraceable Airbnb. Seriously though, do you know of the 4chan leak ? Talking about custom UAPs and a base in the bermuda underwater ? Does that makes some sort of sense from your experience ?

👍 25 🗨️ Reply 📄 Share ...

15 Reply Share ...

+ 10 more replies

+ 2 more replies

CircleWizard • 23h ago

i liked the part where you said you weren't going to identify yourself and then spell out your life story including details that would of been noted from your interview. i would say delete but im sure this post is logged. hope you made up those random personal details.

- 69 Reply Share ...

Tiz68 • 10h ago

Right! That's the very first thing I thought. Bro wants to be anonymous, then posts so much detail from his life before, during, and after, a 3 year old could find out who he is if they wanted to.

10 Reply Share ...

+ 3 more replies

+ TimpRambler • 1d ago

-spartacus- • 20h ago

I can contribute one thing that I know. For some reason CIA (ironically loves to only be called the agency) recruits heavily out of Mormon communities (of which BYU is), while the NSA recruits heavily out of the University of Montana (or state?) but I have no idea why as there doesn't seem to be a big program of cryptography there that I know of.

On the mention of the Mormons, while I guess they would recruit out of BYU, from my understanding CIA likes to recruit many out-of-high school, send them to the "farm" and then off to college. I knew one such person who went to the University of South Dakota before working for the "State Department" and other commercial front companies for the CIA (like DynCorp).

I guess Mormons are good at keeping secrets or obeying orders?

- 31 Reply Share ...

Embarrassed_Serve_90 • 16h ago

It's because, as Mormons, they don't drink or do drugs and have a better chance of passing the strict background checks.

25 Reply Share ...

+ 1 more reply

throwdataway124 • 11h ago

I guess Mormons are good at keeping secrets or obeying orders?

Both. Mormons don't use drugs. Mormons are essentially raised with a very strict upbringing and respect for authority. Mormons are taught to obey their elders etc etc. I've known a few ex-mormons and they're the ideal candidates for government agency jobs to some extent. They're practically molded for secrecy and authority.

17 Reply Share ...

+ 10 more replies

Popular_Librarian_27 • 1d ago

I read it all. I think I believe all of it. None of it seems too surprising. I think our population (all of it) would be willing to say "there is some proof? Legit proof? Will it hurt us? Can it help us? Are we going to be invaded or farmed?" I think those questions are like the most simple outline of things billions of people would wonder?

Appreciate the post and if it was done with clear-minded reason and not misleading intention, it was well worth the read.

Thanks. Proof will come with whistleblower protection. Not to insult BYU, but everyone that is not a BYU grad that worked with me wants it to come out. The reason I know more than I should is because we were all shocked this is just sitting in a warehouse. The proof is on the intranet. Not all of it should be released, but there are some videos that could be released right now that would be unarguably real. I didn't really believe I was really working on what I was working on until I watched one of these. They were on their way to being released when some important people were either intimidated out of their positions or just retired out of being tired.

Not to go on and on, but my very first reaction was to sneak an iPhone into the first office and record the screen of a video a backseater shot with her own cellphone. I guess this has been a long time coming. I watched the whole thing, it was edited down and about 15 minutes long. It was just in a file folder on a computer, I clicked the little arrow and another video popped up, and another, and another. The clip congress showed of the little dome sitting still is a joke. We have videos of enormous, lit up craft at night. Radar data of flying at incomprehensible speeds, stopping on a dime, and then going 90 degrees in another direction. I'm mad these aren't in public hands. I saw someone comment about how Snowden didn't see anything about NHI, and its because these videos exist on one server in one building. There are two backups of the server that get worked on every year or so, depending on how much is added to them. All other copies of the videos and images on the server get destroyed. Documents can be shared between facilities for research purposes and are checked out not unlike version control at a software company, or a library book.

119

nullvoid_techno • 16h ago

What's significant about BYU?

22

phoenix30004 • 14h ago • Edited 9h ago

I'll take this one. Mormons are heavily recruited and tapped into by the federal government. The reason why is they don't have vices that can be leveraged over them. They're not into gambling, promiscuity, drugs, alcohol, etc. So they pass security screenings well.

They also belong to a religion sworn to secrecy about their beliefs. Who better to hire than someone already living a life with secret religious knowledge.

BYU is central for Mormon education and is on par with Ivy league education. Just not advertised as such because it's difficult for non Mormons to get in.

Lastly Mormons come with a free 2nd language from their religious mission training to serve abroad.

Fact check it. The CIA is damn near all Mormons.

76

Naiche16 • 11h ago

This is true..FBI heavily recruits Mormons as well...They have been raised to be loyal even if its a cult.

19

More replies

nullvoid_techno • 10h ago

That'd explain why a lot are fearful over NHI as demons or something. Wow crazy. Thanks.

9

REACT_and_REDACT • 10h ago

11 more replies

6 more replies

20 more replies

somewhat dox yourself. i mean i don't know much about tracking people, but i feel like agencies like these will have that ability to track you using the little info you just gave.

if this is actually a true story, you should think about taking some of that personal info out even if it's too late

↑ 13 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

+ 2 more replies

TheChewyDaniels • 23h ago

"Nuclear explosions and experiments somehow interfere with this navigation. Craft particularly avoid Diablo Canyon, even if we put something they really want there."

What is an example of something they would "really want"?

↑ 12 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

+ 5 more replies

ginpalace • 19h ago

"If you see an image of a large disc above a gas station in the snow..." What an oddly specific example. Any significance?

↑ 12 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

Madness_in_pants • 1d ago

I don't think anyone in their right mind would include any PII in this kind of posts if they were the real deal. Current occupation? Computer science HQ in your home state? That is more than enough to track you down. I'm not even mentioning everything else. I call bullshit on this one.

⊖ ↑ 296 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

cognitive-agent • 1d ago

This. There are waaaaay too many clues in this post. Either this is total baloney, or OP deliberately sprinkled in fake clues to throw them off his trail, or OP was suicided 15 minutes after submitting this.

⊖ ↑ 200 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

ContentPolicyKiller • 1d ago

Seriously, it's all "im not giving any info" and then gives a bunch of specific info. Why include that stuff? It's not pertinent anyway.

⊖ ↑ 98 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

tarkardos • 1d ago

This is what creative writers need to know. If you are working in specialized fields, it is extremely easy to be tracked down, especially when working on classified military / state owned projects with actual security implications. I'm a CS specialist and even in more "broader" fields like mine I could reveal my identity with basics like year dates of previous employments, educational institutions and so on. Hell, me mentioning my actual skill set or what kind of projects I worked on would be an instant give away to any one looking for information breaches.

There is no way that OP isn't trolling, nobody working on highly classified military projects is that stupid. With that kind of given information there is exactly one person in the world fitting that profile, and that's OP. This is instant tribunal to prison territory.

⊖ ↑ 90 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

sunnymorninghere • 1d ago

I don't work in a classified field but highly specialized. We are a very small group of people, if I provided some clues you could guess it's me.. this guy provided a lot of clues ! Unless it's all red herrings

+ 28 more replies

+ 14 more replies

HeyCarpy · 1d ago

I'm a believer that programs like OP describes exist, and this was a great read, but I just don't feel like this was written by someone who fears for their life. Doesn't feel right. I do love these kind of posts though.

↑ 40 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

+ 1 more reply

+ 27 more replies

+ 31 more replies

speleothems · 22h ago · Edited 14h ago

To me at least this seems like it is just a rehash of the other 'whistleblower' accounts. Each department is something that has previously been mentioned, apart from these 'mystery wings' that they don't have reference for. For example:

- Reverse engineering from Bob Lazar's accounts.
- Custom molded metal from Roswell and other accounts.
- Biology research from EBO Reddit post.
- Crash retrievals from 4 Chan guy, including that the different shaped craft are for different purposes, large craft hide underwater, and also that their was a bad change in leadership at a certain point in time.
- Also mentions the CIA being involved with crash retrievals, hinting at the OGA department being involved as was discussed last year.
- Anthropology department from the Mormon guy's post (I suspect it is the same author, as there is a similar writing style, but could be wrong).
- Mechanical engineering potentially from condorman article. Accidentally hit own reverse engineering craft could also be from this.
- Adding a nuke to reverse engineered craft from Danny Sheehan's comments.
- The craft's navigation system kind of sounds like the guild navigators from Dune.
- Changes in how they look over time is similar to the bi-directional mimicry comments by Colm Kelleher.

Calling them ayyyyys and people Karen's feels too young for someone who is at least in their 50s. Also having a high turnover rate makes zero sense for a highly secretive project.

Edit: now they are mentioning a mesh consciousness thing which sounds like it is from the law of one.

⊖ ↑ 132 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

wiggy_E · 22h ago

Thanks for summarizing these, I was also feeling like the average alien aficionado could draft something similar based on existing theories, and sprinkle in just enough new stuff to sound like the real deal

⊖ ↑ 36 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

speleothems · 21h ago · Edited 15h ago

Yeah sometimes it could go either way, as things lining up with other accounts might indicate that these 'whistleblowers' are all talking about the same programs. But this one at least seems like it has too much information in it for such a supposedly super secret compartmentalized program. Like are they all just hanging out in the crash retrievals 'firestation' lounge low-key discussing their work and gossiping about the lady who summoned a UFO.

↑ 12 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

+ 4 more replies

+ PaybackTony · 16h ago · Edited 16h ago

AAAStarTrader · 1d ago

Wow, I hope this isn't a hoax. Assuming it isn't. Thank you for your bravery in posting! Hope we hear from others very soon

⬇️ 63 ⬆️ Reply ⬆️ Share ...

+ Different-Estate747 · 23h ago

Odd-Force-6087 · 22h ago

The Mormons being tied to it, is why I believe some of this post. They already believe about living on another planet in the after life

⬆️ 11 ⬇️ Reply ⬆️ Share ...

eternal_existence1 · 21h ago

Seems like a version of the 4chan leakers post but with extra tidbits added to it. Also as others stated you clearly gave enough info out for you to be tracked, hell, your account itself has your identity. And so on and so on, if the government is this secretive, there's nothing stopping them from getting your info from reddit's data server or whatever it may be.

This story reads as entertaining. Part of me wants this stuff to be true, but do I really wanna know the government's goal is to strap a nuke to it?

We can't really do anything with this info though but think "cool". I'd much rather see this post being said by someone from mouth in front of TV like Grusch did, but instead we're getting Reddit and 4chan posts.

Also even if this is legit, the whole functionality of it just points to we will only have "disclosure" when we are the aliens. When humanity is smarter all around the board. And it sucks.

⬆️ 11 ⬇️ Reply ⬆️ Share ...

+ 2 more replies

shardul27 · 14h ago · Edited 11h ago

- So does the theory of the NHI's purpose mentioned in the EBO Molecular Biologist post. Does the term "Apotheosis" ring a bell?

https://www.reddit.com/r/biology/comments/14s2j9w/from_the_late_2000s_to_the_mid2010s_i_worked_as_a/

- Does Battelle National Biodefense Institute in Fort Detrick, Maryland ring any bells?
- Does The Gran Sasso National Laboratory (LNGS) of National Institute for Nuclear Physics (INFN) in Italy ring any bells?
- Why do you believe the notion of Multiple species to be disinfo? (Dave Grusch has suggested multiple species are present with different morphologies)
- How far back in time does Crash Recovery and knowledge of NHI/UAP existence go?
- Does Radar tech specifically in New Mexico especially in the past interfere with their guidance system, that they avoid it as well? (I know you mentioned Diablo Canyon)
- How far does the security team go checking online UAP info? Are they following reddit, 4Chan, youtube channels, and in discord servers as well?
- Do you know anything about the large craft Ross Coulthart has mentioned not located in the US and so large they built a building on top of it to hide it?
- Do any of the following names ring any bells
 - Majestic 12
 - MAJIC
 - ZODIAC
 - BLUEFLY
 - MOONDUST
 - JEHOVAH

↑ 11 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

+ 7 more replies

xadun · 1d ago

aaaaaaaand OP is gone

⊖ ↑ 48 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

hoosierfan1968 OP · 19h ago

I was out hiking, I hurt my back so I'm not going anywhere.

↑ 57 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

+ 4 more replies

PossibleDue9849 · 21h ago

This was posted 14h ago, I'd give it a few days before giving up on them. They said they were on a "camping trip" and wouldn't answer right away.

⊖ ↑ 18 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

supadumacoca · 20h ago

Op of course is not on a camping trip. All these accounts saying "Uhhh Ohh Op is a larper because he is camping Uhhh Ohhh he is so dumb" lol.

OP probably posted this from a disposable device, connected to a public WI Fi Network from a secure distance of 1 mile using a Yagi antenna in an encrypted environment.

Op has probably not family. But probably the agency has maaaany teachers and that's why he chose to say he is a teacher.

If this is real, all personal information OP posted is definitely fake.

↑ 29 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

+ ethicalsolipsist • 1d ago

Casterly_Tarth • 1d ago

Thanks for sharing.

Although I am really reaching my limit with these stories, I'm seeing signs of societal and environmental collapse every day on this app (wars, starvation, bird flu, forest fires burning down cities) and then I read this kind of stuff and it's just infuriating. Mind you, I've been following the phenomenon since the early '90s, so I'm not a newb to this topic. But here we are 30 years later, and disclosure has ground to a slow halt.

I can't help but feel resentment that you had a great high paying career keeping lifesaving technology secret for a super governmental agency that can take a life on a whim. A cushy life for contractors dealing with NHI tech that could stop climate change and global or local starvation, paid for by the American tax payer with a blank check.

Meanwhile, normal people can't pay rent, American children are going into lunch debt, and people deep in student debt can't find jobs with degrees they paid so much for. I'm sure you and your family had medical care, probably also paid for by the American taxpayer while we still don't have universal health care for ourselves. People are going into debt trying not to die from cancer. do you think the "agency" is sitting on that too?

if you're frustrated by your "agency's" lack of disclosure, you should be. I have a family, too, and I don't want them to die in WW3 or climate wars over resources. global temperatures will be at near 2 degrees C. by 2050 if not earlier. If disclosure doesn't happen, it's not just our families that will suffer, but everyone.

If you're against disclosure of NHI tech you are against the future survival of humanity.

maybe something good will come from this post, maybe not, maybe it's a hoax, but the need for real change is real and I don't see these people at the top stepping up. So I guess I'll just enjoy watching the continued collapse in real time.

⊖ ↑ 76 ↓ 💬 Reply ↗ Share ...

jmcgil4684 • 22h ago

Well said. It's equally interesting and infuriating isn't it?

↑ 17 ↓ 💬 Reply ↗ Share ...

+ 3 more replies

ohheyitsgeoffrey • 21h ago • Edited 19h ago

Why I'm skeptical of this post:

1. Someone who worked as a technician/engineer/scientist/project manager in the most highly secretive and compartmentalized program in the world would unlikely have such broad understanding and knowledge about how the overarching program is organized and what other compartments do. This is how top secret compartmentalized projects work: any one individual knows very little.
2. The language used in this post doesn't strike me as the type of language a professional of this aptitude would employ. It's not proof of course, but I find it suspicious.

I want to believe, but I'm having a hard time believing this particular poster.

⊖ ↑ 54 ↓ 💬 Reply ↗ Share ...

NaZa89 • 18h ago

I agree, and why would you divulge that you teach college, that's wayyy too specific imo

⊖ ↑ 13 ↓ 💬 Reply ↗ Share ...

McLuhanSaidItFirst • 17h ago

If he's real, any detail he gave about anything is a smoke screen

↑ 9 ↓ 💬 Reply ↗ Share ...

InstructionOk274 • 1d ago

Thank you for sharing, we need more people like you to come forward but I know the threat of harm keeps most people silent. Do you think it's possible that NHI are at the top of all of this? Like maybe it's an experiment to see how long it takes for us to start being honest with each other and start truly working together?

↑ 75 ↓ Reply Share ...

+ 1 more reply

governmentsallie • 1d ago

If this name of the company is something that can get you killed, why did your interviewer tell you the name at the beginning of the interview?

⊖ ↑ 45 ↓ Reply Share ...

K69D11A0 • 22h ago

I'd imagine that it's another way of being "read into" the program. Once you know the name, you are tied to it forever. Even if you leave the agency, you are still associated with it in some way, especially purely for the fact that you know it and have worked in one of the wings before.

It's a lifetime membership with no cancellations lol

⊖ ↑ 44 ↓ Reply Share ...

+ Blueeisen • 19h ago

+ 3 more replies

hoosierfan1968 OP • 19h ago

"Company" is a bad word to describe it. It's an internal name really only used to figure out whether or not someone knows it exists or not. If something weird happens, someone can whisper the name and see if other people go "what the hell is that?" or if they nod and know what it is. Lots of people know the name even though don't work for it. I think I was told to gauge my response to the name to see if I freaked out.

⊖ ↑ 62 ↓ Reply Share ...

+ natecull • 17h ago • Edited 15h ago

+ 12 more replies

+ 6 more replies

Pavel413 • 1d ago • Edited 23h ago

Can you speak to what specific information from Anthropology you learned that changed your world view? Or summarize what their current understanding of what NHI are, what their culture is, and what the purpose of them being here is?

↑ 21 ↓ Reply Share ...

Olclops • 1d ago • Edited 23h ago

Thank you for making the morally right decision to no longer gatekeep crucial knowledge about basic reality from the world.

Tell us more about the anthropology report that changed your view of the world.

↑ 20 ↓ Reply Share ...

na_ro_jo • 21h ago • Edited 21h ago

I have frequently seen efforts be siloed over simple workplace politics, and I have been brought in to fix the situation. In these situations, everything was charted, but with plenty of opinion/bias from each workstream, rendering the plans inaccurate, useless, and ineffective. We had to tease out the truth from everybody, build the exhaustive view of the current state, and figure out how to steer these companies back on track. I betcha there is a royal clusterfuck that needs a major cleanup!

This is probably why Robert Bigelow's risk analysis for disclosure calculated the total damage of disclosure would be greater than all the greatest government scandals in history times one million.

↑ 22 ↓ Reply Share ...

+ 3 more replies

Phenomegator • 23h ago

They constantly monitor all discussions about the topic, but rarely act in real life unless absolutely necessary. They staff facilities like the second one I worked at. This team also actively engages in disinformation, gaslighting and other similar campaigns.

Hmmm I wonder what this might look like in practice? 🤔

↑ 9 ↓ Reply Share ...

+ 2 more replies

TheRussianSnac • 23h ago

My takeaways: aliens are spooky. World governments know they are spooky. No governments want the general populace to know just how spooky aliens are.

Also, not sure this is real based on too much potential PII being included unless I, like others have said, was put in as a countermeasure.

Could be real, could be larping. Also could be a psyop.

↑ 9 ↓ Reply Share ...

+ 1 more reply

superunintelligible • 20h ago

Thanks for the post. Still skeptical, but it was an informative read. You mentioned Australia....are you talking about Pine Gap?

↑ 8 ↓ Reply Share ...

NotYourSweatBusiness • 1d ago • Edited 1d ago

+ Create

1

confirm that or is writing down its name forbidden.

What would happen if some person faked knowing its name and guessed the name correctly purely on accident, would random comment on Internet completely out of sight get that person killed? Is entire Internet searched every day to find any mentions of these super secret agencies?

How smart are people in the programs? If David Grusch comes out and starts saying there are bodies at this base will they immediately move the bodies elsewhere so that when anybody gets there they find nothing?

Did you lie about anything in your post to prevent yourself being identified? For example stuff like your gender, profession, etc?

Do you think the story about 9 or 12 astronauts went with aliens to their home planet? If not, how likely on scale from 0-100 do you think such an event has in your opinion happened based on what you have seen and heard.

My thoughts: So you said you don't know where they come from and then there are plenty of candidate planets circulating in UFO stuff in public as Zetta Reticuli in case of Betty and Barney Hill. I imagine that if we as public get these bits and pieces then people who investigate all these stuffs should know more than an average UFO person and get more specifics. Also you said that UFO technology being slowly inserted into our technology is a total hoax because nothing we have compares to the technology you saw. Well it doesn't have to be same, you can look at a random animal in the forest and create some idea based on their behaviour, you don't have to replicate the animal in the lab, just get inspired by it. I think it's highly probable that some of the information gained from this research could be used in some of the stuff we have now including the computers and technology to control them with our thoughts. Which I saw was already being tested in a technology documentary from 90s and few months back I saw random internet celebrity play a video game with their mind.

↑ 32 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

⊕ 1 more reply

AristarcusRex · 19h ago

Very enjoyable post. People will believe what they want but this is fairly plausible. I previously posted about my work in SAP/SCI environments and nothing here sounds out of place vis a vis those elements.

Nothing here contradicts previous disclosure: if you just take the taped direct words of Inman about the craft for example, maybe throw in the acknowledged videos. No problems. Transmedium: I'm still waiting for someone to come up with a 'it's a balloon' explanation for the mitosis you see in the Puerto Rico vid.

I'm sure curious about some of the things that weren't said: what was the life-changing info learned from Anthropology (strange word since 'Anthro' means humanoid/human-like), what is the theory on NHI intentions, what two things need to be solved to build them, etc? Be great to hear more but I'm not greedy - maybe another time.

Thanks for the post.

↑ 7 ↓ Reply ↑ Share ...

⊕ 2 more replies